To whom it may concern,

I studied theology for seven years at the university of Göttingen and Tübingen. After my examinations I am now working for two years as a vikar in the protestant church, going to become a women-pastor.

I know of Bhagwan through his books, tapes, videos and by doing his meditations. I have never before got to know such an intelligent man, not only excellent in his subject of philosophy, but having an immense knowledge in almost every subject including theology. And, in my opinion, it's a knowledge not only from reading, but from experience. That is especially important concern the matter of christian theology, because religion is a form of living in contact with God; is a heart affair, which can only be experienced. All christian theology speaks mainly of Love, because "God is Love" (1 John 4). Bhagwan really is an extraordinary religious teacher and spiritual leader, because he not only speaks of Love, but is this Love himself, showing it to people by his being. Another thing is that he unites all different religions by a synthesis which nobody else has ever managed. Protestant and catholic people have tried very hard for years now to come together, but often they don't succeed or there are only little steps forward. Bhagwan is a specialist in all religions around the world and points to the very essence, to the real truth, because God is one. And by doing this he not only unites people from all different religions, he also unites people from all various countries and nations.

The movement that comes from Bhagwan is a movement of Love, Freedom and Peace.
He really is extraordinary man, as Jesus was,
and especially The United States of America with their religious tolerance and their sense for Liberty should be happy to have such a great man living in their country.

Greetings,
