To Whom it may concern,

I have graduated from Stirling University, Scotland in 1974 with an Honours degree in Psychology, a four year course covering a wide range of traditional and modern authors and practitioners. However when I discovered the writings and discourses of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh shortly afterwards I was immediately impressed by his exceptional ability to go far beyond any other writer in the field. His analysis of the human condition is a synthesis that brings the depths of psychological insight to the heights of our human religious potential. Moreover his many books of discourse give his insight into many texts ancient and modern and in a way that has direct application to human problems. I have witnessed the enrichment of my own life and that of many friends by even a brief contact with him, his followers, his meditations and his working communities.

Yours sincerely,
Jeremy B. Norman
