

To Whom It May Concern:

I am a housewife and business woman relocating in Salt Lake City. I've completed up to 2 years in college plus technical computer training, and in spare time qualified for practical nursing. Upon marrying, I went into business-construction and ran a profitable business for five years. Then we traveled, met Bhagwan, worked in a few of his centers for a few years. I am now remarried, a housewife and a caterer for V.I.P. business parties and their families. In my spare time I write - stories or prose, articles too now and then which are submitted and sometimes accepted by women's magazines.

So on the whole I'm a well-educated working middle class woman, enjoying the life as such in our country. I enjoy it now to the fullest since meeting Bhagwan in 1975. Then new doors opened up for me everywhere and mostly in my daily work and tasks with the family.

When before feminist values influenced my life; Bhagwan and his teachings actually transformed any dissatisfactions into productive, creative vehicles. By seeing him, the way he lives, I understand more clearly the negative aspects in my life; I now see them melting for me into beautiful things.

Feminism did much to surface my political and social concerns. When I came in contact with Bhagwan I learned accept being truly feminine and a forceful power to do and accomplish what I wished, while making friends along the way.

In my work before much was mundane, an effort, the work only partially fulfilling. Since I've met Bhagwan

Work is a ~~trick~~ ^{vehicle} for worship, every task becoming a joy. My patience with children is endless. My ability to please even the most finicky guests is incredible. Every sauce, every dish reaches a perfection now - and boredom with repetition does not exist. Best most of all, ~~it~~ the true enjoyment of all the people I meet. Before I was very judgemental, that people should be a certain way. Now the 'should' has disappeared and an acceptance of what is presides.

What I have seen in Bhagwan has enabled me, through his truly divine religiousness, to enjoy the totality of life, accepting unconditionally whatever life brings me, and to be grateful for all that we have. And in America we have more than enough. He is the most dynamic, loving religious leader I've ever come in contact with, maybe second to our Lord Christ, but he is alive and with us now in the modern world. A gift I hope you are allowed to discover, as many of my friends have already. I think I can say they feel as I do about this extraordinary man. His teachings, his very presence move each of us, change us, transform us. Being near a presence so potent and loving is a moving force for all who enter.

Sincerely
