

To Whom It May Concern

I was born and educated in England. After finishing the G.C.E. examinations I travelled abroad and studied psychology and the arts extensively and independently. All my experience and learning I applied to working with children in an effort to help them reach their full potential as human beings.

I have always been deeply concerned with humanity and the human condition, trying to resolve the many apparent conflicts and contradictions of human nature.

Then finally like a great blessing I began reading the books of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh and realised that here was someone who finally understood human nature and someone who could point the way for humanity. Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh is the greatest psychologist the world has ever known and we are fortunate that He is here at this time when such chaotic conditions prevail in the world. Through His teachings and meditations there is hope for modern man.

I have been a disciple of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh for seven years and my life has been transformed. The presence of such a person with His extraordinary understanding of human potential would be a tremendous benefit and asset to any country, not only for the general good but also on an economic level.

Yours sincerely,
