To Whom it may Concern.

I first heard of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh in 1978 when a close friend wrote to me from India telling me of her experiences in the Poona ashram. At the time I was living in London with my husband and two children working full time as an emergency ambulance driver. I was very interested to learn more of this Master and purchased a couple of his books. From there my growing interest took me to the London Rajneesh meditation Centre where I listened to discourses and attended workshops. I'd grown up with a conventional christian religious background, but it never seemed to fit. Discovering Bhagwan meant rediscovering a religion absolutely relevant to not only me but to our world today. The topics he covered in his discourses astounded me, he encompasses every subject imaginable and gives a new insight to all concepts and prior religions. I also watched at how his sannyasins responded in such a healthy way to his teachings and could feel a quality of love invoked in their daily lives.

In 1979 I became a sannyasin myself and found the way I dealt with my patients during my work changing a great deal! I could feel more genuinely compassionate, rather than just "doing my job", and through this derived a much greater sense of enjoyment in all I undertook.

The following years I have spent much time working in various Ragnesh Meditation Centres, including a visit to Poona, where sitting with the Master Himself in his morning discourses confirmed all my feelings of this remarkable religious teacher and spiritual leader. I have also visited the commune that is rapidly growing under his guidance in Oregon, and feel this to be an exciting project that is proving to be of exceptional benefit economically and culturally, and to the general welfare not only in Oregon itself but throughout the U.S.A. and the rest of the world.

I would like to see his message more and more available world-wide, it seems to me that while Bhagwan is here amongst us we should all be able to take the opportunity to look at the new concept of living that he shows us and through him learn to live again in a totally positive, healthy, loving way.

Yours sincerely,
Prashant
